

Reading two or more familiar books in a fast, phrased and fluent way

I can retell the story from the pictures

My reading makes it sound like a story

I can read the groups of words that go together

I can change my voice (Punctuation, intonation, expression)

I can listen to my reading to check that it sounds like a story

I read in sentences

I can quickly check that what I say matches what I can see

Letter Identification and word making

I can say the name of all of the letters
I can say the sound that a letter makes and name an object that has the same sound as its first letter
I can use rime to use a word that I know to get to a new word. i.e. is, his.
I can look quickly and sort letters into groups (Magnetic letters)
I can explain the differences between letters
I can explain the differences and similarities between the uppercase and lowercase letters
I can make words and check they look right

Writing a story

I can say my story and keep it in my head

I can re-read independently to check that my writing makes sense

I can push my finger up for each sound as I slowly say the word I am spelling (sound boxes)

I can search through words L-R to confirm that the words I spell look right

I can independently attempt a new word, check it, correct it and then practise it until I can write it without looking

Reading a new story

I can orient myself to a new book. Ask questions, predict, make connections.

My attempts make sense and look right on my first attempt

I can re-read independently to check that my reading makes sense

I self monitor that what I am reading makes sense and looks right

I can search through words L-R to find and confirm visual information I know
